About Central States Communication Association

Central States Communication Association (CSCA) is an academic organization of communication professionals including college and university professors, students, and K-12 educators.

CSCA was founded in 1931 to promote the communication discipline in educational, scholarly, and professional endeavors. The association, which consists of the 13 Midwestern states of North Dakota, South Dakota, Nebraska, Kansas, Oklahoma, Missouri, Illinois, Iowa, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Michigan, Indiana, and Ohio, is governed by an Executive Committee and is legislated by its constitution and bylaws.

The organization has grown to become the largest regional communication association in the United States and the fourth largest academic communication association in the world.

CSCA has 27 Interest Groups, Caucuses, and Sections that promote particular communication areas or other member interests. The association hosts a yearly convention within the 13 states, maintains a website (www.csc-net.org), publishes a newsletter three times yearly, and publishes the journal Communication Studies every two months as well as the Journal of Communication Pedagogy on an annual basis.

Dear Friends and Colleagues:

I would like to welcome you to Chicago, IL for the 89th annual meeting of the Central States Communication Association! Al González has worked tirelessly to put together an excellent program featuring your work around the theme Borders and Breakthroughs. I have no doubt that you will enjoy your time conversing with friends, attending panels, and sharing your ideas with your colleagues.

Beyond the work you all submitted, the CSCA Executive Committee, along with Al González, have deliberately scheduled sessions to create dialogue surrounding issues of diversity and inclusion. This will be an ongoing project with an ad hoc committee I created that Ahmet Atay has agreed to chair. This year, we kick off the new Calloway-Thomas Inclusivity Speaker Series. Additionally, we are hosting two “Presidential Listening Sessions on Inclusivity at CSCA” during this year’s conference. All are welcome to attend to share their experiences with CSCA and provide feedback on things we do well and all of the areas we could improve upon. Also, Kathy Denker, Tiffany Wang, and Al González are excited to launch the CSCA Next Leaders Network that will provide opportunities for you to learn about CSCA, interact with CSCA members, and help plan and shape the future direction of the association and your career. Finally, various interest groups have also created sessions on these topics. While we know this is just a start on this important work that we need to do as an association, your participation is essential so that we can continue this work in the years to come.

One of the important jobs as President is to plan the Undergraduate Research Honors Conference. This year we had a record number of submissions and expanded the number of panel slots to try to address the influx of excellent work from these students. As a faculty member in a department focused on undergraduate education, I know the importance of students asking communication research questions and engaging in meaningful analysis. CSCA has a strong history of supporting the work of undergraduate students, and many of these students have continued to return to CSCA as graduate students and faculty. Please make time in your schedule to attend one of the Undergraduate Research Honors Conference paper or poster sessions. I promise you will not be disappointed in engaging with the future of our discipline.

Finally, I want to express some thanks. First, thanks again to Al González, his team, and the program planners for putting together a truly excellent theme and program. Also, thanks to the entire CSCA Executive team for their work and thoughtful deliberation for some serious issues that we have faced as an organization in the past year. Even through these challenges, the organization is thriving, thanks in no small part to Chad Edwards, our Executive Director, and Jeff Child, the chair of the Finance Committee. The amount of hours and emotional energy they, and others, have spent in the last year have ensured that CSCA will be thriving for years to come. Please thank them when you see them at this conference.

It has been my honor to serve the CSCA members this past year. I hope you have a wonderful conference!

M. Chad McBride
CSCA President

Creighton
UNIVERSITY

Welcome Everyone:

This is the 89th annual gathering of the Central States Communication Association and I have the pleasure of serving as the central planner for the programs at this meeting. If you are new to academe or new to CSCA, you are welcome. Please do not hesitate to approach me or other officers and we will get your network started!

I am gratified by how many members have responded to the convention theme, “Borders and Breakthroughs” and as a result, we see many exciting discussions planned across all of the CSCA Interest Groups, Caucuses, and Sections. The word “borders” appears about 70 times in panel and paper sessions and variations of the theme appear in many other sessions. Thank you for submitting your individual research papers and discussion session ideas.

Here are a few special features from this year’s program:

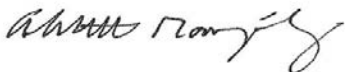

- The CSCA Next Leaders Network is a new initiative with sessions and events throughout the convention. If you are an early-career member, be sure to look for and attend the mentoring sessions and social activities planned by the CSCA Next Leaders Network.
- At our convention, Elizabeth Lozano presents her memorable performance, “Truth Telling on the Borders of Violence and Peace,” which emerges from her anti-violence work in Columbia and the U.S.
- The Calloway-Thomas Inclusivity Series has expanded from one session to four. You won’t want to miss sessions that feature conversations with Karla Scott, Tina Harris, and Robin M. Boylorn. The Series concludes with an important discussion panel on Black Women in the Discipline.
- The CSCA Scholars Conversations features Scott Myers, Christina Beck, and Melissa Beall. Be sure to catch their reflections on their careers and answers to expected and (likely) unexpected questions!

As you attend panels and business meetings, please be sure to thank the officers and planners in your Interest Group, Caucus, or Section for their service to CSCA. The review and session-building process requires time and attention at the most awkward times, but your unit officers have been dedicated to selecting cutting-edge and provocative panels. Let me be the first to thank your unit planners for their hard work.

The convention program is the culmination of the work of many people. I would like to thank Chad Edwards and Tiffany Wang for their guidance, Kathie Cesa for addressing all things membership, Kelly Taylor at BGSU for program design, the faculty, staff and graduate students in the School of Media & Communication at BGSU for support since the beginning, Chad McBride and Amy Aldridge Sanford for their presidential wisdom, and the student volunteers for being at the front line. Last but not least, I would like to thank Jaelyn Shetterly and Anke Wolbert for their work in putting this program together.

Have an informative and inspiring convention and be sure to join us next year in Cincinnati!

Sincerely,

Alberto González, CSCA First Vice President

Call for Papers and Panels

Inspire

Central States Communication Association Hilton Netherland Plaza Cincinnati, OH March 23-28, 2021

You are cordially invited to submit competitive papers, panel discussions, and performance sessions for our 90th Annual Convention in Cincinnati, Ohio. Members are encouraged to reflect on the theme of Inspire. Our many roles as teachers and scholars ask a great deal from us intellectually, emotionally, and relationally. Our annual conference provides us an opportunity to pause, reflect, connect, and reconnect with each other and with what inspired us to choose these lives we lead. When the conference is at its best, our connections often help us to reinvigorate our energy so that we can return to our homes to offer energy to our students, our colleagues, our families and friends, and our work. How does our work inspire other individuals, communities, organizations, and societies toward their aspirations? How can we inspire our students? Each other?

Central States is a space that is reinvented every time we gather together at the conference, every time we talk with a colleague, and every time we share our research, our teaching ideas, and our very selves. We are not a perfect organization. How can we inspire each other to create a welcoming space for all our members?

Faculty, students, independent scholars, and community members are all encouraged to submit and attend the convention. Institutional and community partnerships are particularly welcome. Submissions inclusive of all methodological perspectives in the communication discipline are expected and embraced.

Look for specific calls and submission information from each of the 20+ CSCA Interest Groups, Caucuses, and Sections.

For questions about the general call or the 2021 conference, please contact Debbie Ford, 2021 primary program planner, at DebraFord@creighton.edu.

Deadline for Submissions: 11:59 PM CST October 9, 2020

Directions for using the online system:

Preconference: Advanced Qualitative Methods Workshop

Sponsor: CSCA Second Vice President
Chair: Debra J. Ford, Creighton University
Speakers:
 Jimmie Manning, University of Nevada, Reno
 Kathy Denker, Ball State University
 Karina Willes, UW-Milwaukee

Join us for the 2020 Pre-conference featuring Advanced Qualitative Analysis and Coding offered by Jimmie Manning. In this workshop, participants will review and practice multiple approaches to interpretive analysis of qualitative data that are well-suited for communication research. In addition to an overview of each analytical approach, participants will practice using data. The workshop will also feature two research presentations from scholars who are using innovative approaches in their own work; and, in the final segment, participants will dig into their own projects as they work to consider what analytical tools might be beneficial.

Participants for this seminar should have at least completed one course in qualitative research methods and should be actively working on a project using qualitative data.

"I'd Rather Stay Silent": Dismantling Barriers to Help Students Find Their Voice in the Basic Course

Sponsor: Basic Course Interest Group
Chair: Amber Alvey, South Dakota State University
Speakers:
Ian Berry, North Dakota State University
Kelli Jean Chromey, South Dakota State University
Jessica Marie Peterson, University of Wisconsin- La Crosse
Joshua Westwick, South Dakota State University
Lori Walters-Kramer, Monmouth College

Often, the line between what's going on in the classroom and the larger socio-political sphere is blurred. Students enrolled in the basic course can experience communication apprehension and an assumption that they lack agency which prevents them from discussing and presenting on controversial topics. This panel seeks to dismantle the borders of situational communication apprehension and tough topics in the classroom. The discussion will include conversations on pedagogical practices, mentoring, and experimental activities to promote effective teaching in the basic course.

1101 8:00 AM to 9:15 AM Loews Chicago O'Hare Prado 2
"Sources Please!": Dealing with Misinformation in the Age of Electronic Media

Sponsor: Media Studies Interest Group
Chair: Tatsuya Suzuki, University of Kansas
Speakers:
Matthew M. Dorr, Northeastern State University
Cathryn Thomas
Austin Beattie, The University of Iowa
Nicholas John French, South Dakota State University
Anthony Woodall, University of Oklahoma

Digital media, and now, social media, have become staples for discovering information quickly. This hunger for information has made it very easy for massive amounts of misinformation to circulate. This panel seeks to discuss the ease by which misinformation is spread through digital and social media, as well as how it can affect research and academia.

1102 8:00 AM to 9:15 AM Loews Chicago O’Hare Gallery 524

Best Practices in British Parliamentary Debate Tournament Management

Sponsor: Argumentation and Forensics Interest Group

Chair: Will Reilley Silberman, University of Kentucky

Speakers:

- David Steinberg
- Kiranjeet Dhillon
- Robert Ruiz
- Robert Margesson
- Gina Iberri-Shea
- Nicholas Aranda

This panel's purpose is to initiate a dialogue on emerging and aspirational standards for tournaments. The panel will also discuss issues related to tournament planning, budgeting, scheduling, announcement, invitations and documentation, logistics, equity, tournament quality of life, tab room operation, and other tournament-related issues impacting competitive practice.

1103 8:00 AM to 9:15 AM Loews Chicago O’Hare Warhol B

Borders, Struggles, and Untold Stories: Experiences of Inter/transnational Faculty in the Discipline

Sponsor: Intercultural Communication Interest Group

Chair: Ahmet Atay, College of Wooster

Speakers:

- Ahmet Atay, College of Wooster
- Diana Trebing, Saginaw Valley State University
- Hsun-Yu Sharon Chuang, Denison University
- Godfried Asante, Drake University
- Elizabeth M. Lozano, Loyola University Chicago
- Emi Kanemoto, State University New York at Geneseo
- Sasha Allgayer, State University of New York at Geneseo
- Eddah Mutua, St. Cloud State University

Inter/transnational students and faculty are an important part of the US education landscape. However, breaking into academia and the communication field in particular is impeded due to disciplinary as well as national and international borders, political challenges, and obstacles. The goal of this panel is to articulate these borders and challenges as well as possible ways to challenge and/or overcome them.

Climate Change: Crossing Boundaries of Framing Theory and Environmental Communication

Sponsor: Political Communication Interest Group

Chair: Christopher Jackson, Wake Forest University

Speakers:

- Jacob Miller, Kansas State University
- Xianlin Jin, University of Kentucky

Paul D'Angelo
Brooke Siefert

This panel contributes to our understanding of how people communicate about the risks this planet faces by bringing together scholars working at the nexus of framing theory and climate change communication. The goal is to facilitate dialogue on this crucial concern while time still exists.

Sponsor: Community College Interest Group

Chair: Julie Weishar, Parkland College

Speakers:

Emily McWorthy
Kendra McClure
Jennifer Hough, Western Iowa Tech Community College
Jennifer DeRouchey, Laramie County Community College
Shweta Arpit Srivastava, Monmouth College

We focus on the best ways to meet federal mandates for accessible course materials in traditional and online classrooms. We will be sharing some of the barriers and breakthroughs that faculty are experiencing, and we will provide ideas about best practices for creating high quality accessible materials.

Queer Mentoring: Transcending Boundaries and Advancing Queer Scholars

Sponsors: CSCA Next Leaders Network; Sexual Orientation and Gender Identity Caucus

Chair: Tim McKenna-Buchanan, Manchester University

Speakers:

Michaela D.E. Meyer, Christopher Newport University
Tony Adams, Bradley University
Stephanie Young, University of Southern Indiana
Danielle M. Stern, Christopher Newport University

In light of documented barriers that LGBTQ faculty and staff face in academia, this discussion panel brings together queer mentors and people who want mentoring (that's you!) to connect, commiserate, and discuss ways for queer folks to thrive in higher education. Come with your questions, concerns, and frustrations, and let's work together to build each other up.

The Rhetorical Resources of Bipartisanship

Sponsor: Rhetorical Theory and Criticism Interest Group
Chair: Bethany Keeley-Jonker, Trinity Christian College
Speakers:

Rebecca Kuehl, South Dakota State University
Thomas A. Salek, Concordia University-Chicago
Olivia R. Knippling, South Dakota State University

This panel gathers scholars engaged in historical and contemporary research on bipartisan rhetoric in U.S. government, including in Congress, at events like national prayer breakfasts, and bipartisan responses to tragedies. We ask, how and to what ends have political actors used bipartisan language in the past and present? Does bipartisan rhetoric offer an opportunity to break through political and ideological boundaries? If so, how?

More diverse student populations and faculty are entering higher education in the US. Although a more diverse student and faculty population is definitely welcome, it also brings various challenges, for which we often times are unprepared. As educators, we continuously search for innovative teaching techniques and new culturally sensitive approaches in order to teach all students effectively while trying to understand our students' learning styles and diverse needs.

Communication Theory challenges both students and instructors. For many students, the word theory carries negative connotations; for instructors, the diverse nature of theory forces them to teach beyond the borders of their area of expertise. This course assists current and future instructors who want students to care about, understand, compare, and apply a range of communication theories. The course offers sample syllabi, assignments, methods of evaluation, comparison of textbooks, classroom activities, discussion ideas, and video and Internet resources.

A survey of communication scholars' attitudes toward peer review processes revealed they feel they provide better reviews than they receive (Curtin, Russial, & Tefertiller, 2018), suggesting dissatisfaction with the reviews they receive. Further, less than half of respondents agreed the overall quality of reviewing is good, and 81.4% felt reviewer training should be provided at conferences (Curtin et al., 2018). This panel seeks to fill this need by offering a space to dialogue about improving peer review.

Spotlight: Racism, Communication Studies, and the Future of CSCA

Sponsor: CSCA First Vice President

Chair: Ashley R. Hall, Illinois State University

Speakers:

Ahmet Atay, College of Wooster
Sandra L. Pensoneau-Conway, Southern Illinois University Carbondale
Amy Aldridge Sanford, Texas A&M University, Corpus Christi
Ashley R. Hall, Illinois State University
Eddah Mutua, St. Cloud State University

The Communication Studies discipline has been rocked by recent movements (e.g., #commsowhite) and controversies (e.g., representation of scholars of color in leadership/awards) regarding racism in the academy. These issues lead us to believe that our discipline has a lot of work ahead of it, and the time and place to act is here and now. CSCA can realize a much more racially conscious and inclusive culture, but doing so must begin with a frank, open conversation about the issues that face the association. This panel will provide a place for scholars to describe the culture of CSCA, the issues that face its future, and how members can begin to reimagine CSCA as a more inclusive space. Although this problem is larger than any one conference, or indeed even the discipline, we believe that the CSCA can be at the forefront of conversations about equity and justice.

Short Course: Teaching the Organizational Culture Class: Reconceptualizing Borders through a Constitutive Approach

Sponsor: Short Courses
 Speakers:
 Gerald Driskill, U.A.-Little Rock
 Elena Gabor, Bradley University
 Ryan T. Hartwig, Colorado Christian University

Participants will gain hands-on experience in an interdisciplinary, constitutive approach to teaching organizational culture. This approach introduces metaphors associated with CCO (Communicative Constitutive of Organizations) approaches while positing a definition of organizational communication that foregrounds ethics (Bisel, 2018). Participants will engage in cultural analysis activities for graduate and undergraduate classes. Example case analysis will be provided from varied organizational types. The Organizational Culture in Action (OCA) six stage model (Driskill, 2018) will be introduced with options for data collection and analysis based on the role of cultural elements such as stories and rituals as they constitute the organization.

Presidential Listening Session on Inclusivity at CSCA

Sponsor: CSCA President
Chair: M. Chad McBride, Creighton University
In Summer 2019, the CSCA Executive Committee released the following statement:
The Executive Board of the Central States Communication Association supports changes within the National Communication Association to be more inclusive and diverse. Believing that excellence emerges from equity, inclusiveness, and diversity, we commit to reexamining CSCA's policies to seek out ways to improve our association's practices. Thank you to those who have been seeking positive changes within NCA and speaking out. We support your work.
We have created a Presidential Ad Hoc committee to examine our practices, and we are hosting this listening session so that we can hear and learn from the experiences of our CSCA attendees.

Short Course: Transcending the Disciplinary Borders: Breakthroughs in Integrating Community-Based Learning in Public Speaking, Argument, and Advocacy Instruction

Sponsor: Short Courses
Speakers:
 Leila Brammer, University of Chicago
 Sarah Wolter, Gustavus Adolphus College

This short course presents an innovative instructional model for active civic engagement in communication courses. Grounded in rhetorical processes of civic inquiry and civic action, the model engages students in responsible and productive community-based research and inclusive communication on civic issues. Through civic engagement based in theory and ethics of responsible communication, students demonstrate significant development in communication and liberal arts skills, student voice, and civic agency. This short course is aimed at those who wish to incorporate theory-driven, research-based, meaningful and responsible civic engagement, community-based assignments, and civic learning in disciplinary and other courses.

Chair: Lisa DeWeert, Illinois State University

Speakers:

Katrina (Katie) Webber, University of Connecticut
 Amy Jo Ellefson, The University of Southern Mississippi
 Josefina Loza Wells, University of Nebraska at Omaha
 Kelly G. Odenweller, Iowa State University
 Amnee Elkhaliid, University of Missouri
 Lisa DeWeert, Illinois State University

Within the context of parent-child communication, this discussion-based panel explores how uncomfortable topics are communicated, and the lasting effects on identity and familial relationships. Through examples of difficult conversations around race, weight and body, disability, religion, gender, and sexuality, these researchers discuss the use of various methodologies to explore how these conversations cross borders, break barriers, and impact identity of both the parent and child.

Short Course: Incorporating Networks Perspectives into Communication Courses

Sponsor: Short Courses

Chair: Seungyoon Lee, Purdue University

Speakers:

Seungyoon Lee, Purdue University

Bailey C. Benedict, Purdue University

Zachary Robert Wittrock, Lincoln Parkway Consulting

Interest in networks – like social networks, computer networks, and ecological networks – is growing among public and scholarly communities. This short course will describe how instructors in different subfields in communication can integrate network perspectives into their classes. A general overview of key network concepts and theories that can be utilized when teaching classes in organizational, health, interpersonal, and political/mass communication will be provided. Attendees will participate in a sample lesson and activity (i.e., "Who Dunnit") on analyzing network structure and information flow and be given resources for facilitating the lesson on their own.

Sponsor: Strategic and Applied Communication Interest Group

Chair: Matthew Seeger, Wayne State University

Speakers:

Guosong Shao,

Timothy Sellnow, University of Central Florida

Gayle M. Pohl, University of Northern Iowa

Strategic communication is becoming a more common name for departments, majors, and academic programs. It embraces more variety of communication theory and tactics than the traditional public relations designation. Applied communication scholarship is growing in importance and influence. Join us for an open discussion for what this means for the communication discipline, teaching and research. The new SACIG hopes these discussions can help to define scholarship that is of interest to our members and to identify the changes ongoing in the discipline.

In the era of globalization, the role of international faculty in the global academy as well as in their countries of origin cannot be underestimated as they impact the academy in numerous ways. This roundtable brings together international scholars to engage in dialogue with their U.S-born counterparts about more equitable, inclusive, and truth-oriented scholarly exchanges in the academy. The discussion will focus on "borders" and "breakthroughs" in the academy. We hope to examine ways that successes and challenges encountered become the contexts to mobilize for more inclusion. Each panelist will share their experiences negotiating the academy and local/global concerns within historical, cultural, theoretical and social meanings that shape their identity, teaching, research and service.

Sponsor: CSCA First Vice President

Chair: Allison R. Thorson, University of San Francisco

Speakers:

Leslie J. Harris, University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee

Erin Sahlstein Parcell, University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee

The Gun Violence Project is an interdisciplinary, university/community collaboration that seeks to make sense of social spaces through the lens of gun violence, with explicit attention to the complex and often unheard or forgotten narratives that participate in shaping spaces. Beginning with Milwaukee, Wisconsin, The Gun Violence Project aims to recover stories and experiences that would otherwise be lost or obfuscated by official narratives. This project will ultimately map oral histories of gun violence through a multi-modal, interactive map. This presentation will preview the early outcomes of the project and highlight the significance for communication researchers.

Public relations practitioners are adept at building and maintaining relationships. However, practitioners often fall short when they are tasked with bridging professional practices and academia. The future of public relations lies in the development of mutually influential relationships. It lies in the intangible capital built from relationships between public relations professors and practitioners.

This session specifically looks at how Cialdini's six paths to influence can foster mutually influential relationships that create stronger job funnels from university PR programs to the workplace and build on the foundations of the industry.

Communicating about finances is an often-feared topic. Individuals, couples, and families all must make financial decisions by active conversational engagement, de facto decision-making, or by non-action among other strategies. The Short Course topic, Borders & Breakthroughs of Communicating Finances in the Family: Talking and Taking Action, breaks through the fear and apprehension about discussing money, and offers communication and financial concepts and strategies to move attendees from seeing money as a "problem" to money as a "path" to achieving financial goals. This topic applies to a number of communication courses including family, interpersonal, small group, community, and conflict management. Every attendee will receive a copy of the panelists’ book “Communicating Finances in the Family: Talking and Taking Action,” which was published by Cognella this spring.

Speakers:

Diana Christine Woodhouse, College of Southern Nevada
Ahmet Atay, College of Wooster
Tony Adams, Bradley University
Jennifer Tuder, St. Cloud State University
Raquel Irene Polanco, University of Houston Clear Lake
Christopher Collins, Missouri State University

This panel offers seven short performances that explore, challenge, critique, and celebrate the place of the libidinous in performance studies and autoethnography. Given our overlapping investment in embodiment, the relationship between the self and other, and the intersections of discursive, cultural, and material communication phenomena, this panel argues for aesthetic performance as a unique epistemic site for engaging ethical questions surrounding the embodied facts of the libidinous in our research, pedagogy, and everyday human experience.

Our positionalities may create certain boundaries between the pedagogue/mentors and students in academic settings. The dynamic that can emerge based on differences and/or similarities between them can be pivotal in the affect and effect of these relationships. In this panel, panelists reflect on their positionalities as pedagogues/mentors and moments of borders built, which could be both necessary at times and obstructive otherwise. They, then, explore the ways in which they strategically utilize their positionality to navigate through those borders and possibly to break through them. The panelists extend their discussion on pedagogical and mentoring efforts in breaking through the boundaries.

Presidential Listening Session on Inclusivity at CSCA

Sponsor: CSCA President
 Chair: M. Chad McBride, Creighton University
 In Summer 2019, the CSCA Executive Committee released the following statement:
 The Executive Board of the Central States Communication Association supports changes within the National Communication Association to be more inclusive and diverse. Believing that excellence emerges from equity, inclusiveness, and diversity, we commit to reexamining CSCA's policies to seek out ways to improve our association's practices. Thank you to those who have been seeking positive changes within NCA and speaking out. We support your work.

We have created a Presidential Ad Hoc committee to examine our practices, and we are hosting this listening session so that we can hear and learn from the experiences of our CSCA attendees.

Creating critical thinkers is a major goal for many communication classes. As the variety of students attending college has widened, however, the literature on critical thinking in our classroom has not kept up. It does not address the barriers faced by many groups our courses serve. This panel works to identify concrete strategies for engaging students from a variety of groups including: veterans, career/technical, community college, and urban and rural students.

President's Undergraduate Research Conference Luncheon and Graduate School Fair

Sponsor: CSCA First Vice President

Chair: M. Chad McBride, Creighton University

The URHC Luncheon and Graduate fair requires an RSVP and is for the UHRC authors and their supporters. The agenda includes a lunch, a keynote presentation, top paper awards, and graduate school exhibits. Food will be available promptly at 11:30am; guests are encouraged to arrive between 11:20 and 11:25am

During the meal, Dr. Amanda Holman, Assistant Professor from Creighton University, will give the keynote (See bio below.) After the meal and the award presentations, students will have an opportunity to interact with graduate school directors and learn more about opportunities associated with attaining an advanced degree.

Amanda Holman, PhD
Assistant Professor
Creighton University

Dr. Amanda Holman is an Assistant Professor in the Department of Communication Studies at Creighton University. Amanda grew up in Northern Minnesota and earned her bachelor's degree from Concordia College in Moorhead, Minnesota. After graduation from college she worked at Microsoft for a year before pursuing her Master's from University of Montana and her PhD from University of Nebraska – Lincoln. Her teaching and research focus on family, interpersonal, and health communication. Specifically, she teaches Interpersonal Communication, Family Communication about Health Topics, Adolescent Communication, Dark Side of Personal Relationships, and Research Methods. Amanda's teaching effectiveness has been recognized through multiple teaching awards and exemplary student teaching evaluations. Most notably, in 2019, she received the Central States Communication Association Pearson and Nelson Outstanding New Teacher Award. Amanda's research focuses on how individuals communicatively manage, negotiate, and make sense of challenging health-related topics and how those interactions shape individuals' identities, perceptions, and behaviors. Within this research area she concentrates on parent-adolescent communication about sex-related topics and individual and couple communication surrounding pregnancy loss. Her work is published in journals such as Communication Monographs, Journal of Family Communication, and Health Communication. Her parent-adolescent sex communication research is the foundation for her Let's Change the Talk health campaign that seeks to normalize sex-related conversations in the family and build parents' confidence to talk with their children through local resources and empirically based workshops. It is well known that Amanda's most rewarding part of her job is mentoring undergraduate students throughout the research process. During her 6 years at Creighton, she founded an undergraduate research team that has been essential to her data collection, analysis, community engagement, and health campaign. While still early in her career, she has already mentored 24 undergraduate research assistants and together they have conducted more than 300+ hours of research and 150+ hours of community engagement. In addition, many of these research assistants have presented their own research at CSCA and a majority of them pursue graduate or medical school after graduation. Outside of her academic work Amanda and her family enjoy traveling, the outdoors, DIY projects, and frequenting local ice cream shops – especially if they have dark chocolate ice cream.

Health communication scholars often struggle with grounding their studies in theory, as well as contributing to theory development. Discussants will talk about how they break through borders to include theories from across the communication discipline in their research. Participants will also discuss borders that serve as challenges to including theory in their scholarship.

Melissa L. Beall has received many awards from the National Communication Association, including the Marcella E. Oberle Award for Outstanding Teaching in Grades K-12 (1989); the Donald H. Ecroyd Award for Outstanding Teaching in Higher Education (2016); and the Samuel L. Becker Distinguished Service Award (2019). She was named to the CSCA Hall of Fame in 2012. Melissa and John Heineman initially met at the Nebraska state speech tournament years ago when John was a senior in high school and Melissa was a tournament judge. A few years later, Melissa became John's supervising teacher at Lincoln Southeast High School. As active members and officers of the Nebraska Speech Communication and Theatre Association, they presented workshops across the state and at local, regional, and national conventions. When Melissa joined the faculty at the University of Northern Iowa, John followed to pursue a master's degree in communication. For more than 40 years, Melissa and John have worked collaboratively on many projects, served together as unit officers for CSCA and NCA, and have remained close friends and colleagues.

As the communication discipline expands, projects grow in scope and complexity. Further, as university funding sources shrink, grants are increasingly encouraged and necessary to conduct large scale projects. Yet, scaling from smaller independent projects to large scale grant, interdisciplinary, and/or community engaged projects can be intimidating. To help traverse this boundary, panelists will share how they began this type of work, best practices, and lessons learned through experiences.

For the past 20 years, professors at Wisconsin Lutheran College have utilized an intercultural simulation called "XandY" as a part of our Basic Course. Every semester, the activity is conducted just prior to discussions of the chapter on cultural diversity and communication. This simulation has and continues to provide a rich experience for students that is remembered long after the semester has concluded. In this short course, we plan to share the theoretical and empirical support for the pedagogical choice of using simulations in the classroom, offer participants an opportunity to participate in "XandY" and debrief the experience, and finally, share information regarding materials and preparation necessary to set up and conduct the simulation.

Spotlight: Truth Telling on the Borders of Violence and Peace

Sponsor: CSCA First Vice President

Chair: Alberto González, Bowling Green State University

Speaker:

Elizabeth M. Lozano, Loyola University Chicago

In this presentation/performance Dr. Elizabeth Lozano explores the social construction and intersection of gender and violence in the context of lived public spaces, in Colombia and the United States. She uses a first account narrative to describe and analyze a specific thread of experiences across decades, with the aim of shedding light into cultural structures of signification otherwise buried or made invisible.

Dr. Lozano argues that in the context of a broken and imperfect "post-conflict" in Colombia and "#metoo" mobilization in the U.S., it behooves us collectively to make visible structures of signification that have been taken for granted, and to retell and resignify everyday experience.
