ABOUT CENTRAL STATES COMMUNICATION ASSOCIATION

Central States Communication Association (CSCA) is an academic organization of communication professionals including college and university professors, students, and K-12 educators.

CSCA was founded in 1931 to promote the communication discipline in educational, scholarly, and professional endeavors. The association, which consists of the 13 Midwestern states of North Dakota, South Dakota, Nebraska, Kansas, Oklahoma, Missouri, Illinois, Iowa, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Michigan, Indiana, and Ohio, is governed by an Executive Committee and is legislated by its constitution and bylaws.

The organization has grown to become the largest regional communication association in the United States and the fourth largest academic communication association in the world.

CSCA has 27 Interest Groups, Caucuses, and Sections that promote particular communication areas or other member interests. The association hosts a yearly convention within the 13 states, maintains a website (www.csc-net.org), publishes a newsletter three times yearly, and publishes the journal Communication Studies every two months as well as the Journal of Communication Pedagogy on an annual basis.

Meet Minneapolis
City by Nature

January 12, 2026

Dear Central States Communication Association Attendees,

On behalf of Meet Minneapolis, it is my pleasure to welcome the Central States Communication Association to Minneapolis. Thank you for choosing our city as the host destination for your 2026 conference.

We hope you'll take time to experience all that Minneapolis has to offer—from expansive parks and scenic lakes to award-winning dining, vibrant performing arts, and world-class sports and entertainment. With convenient light rail access and a downtown skyway system connecting hotels, dining, and attractions indoors, getting around the city is easy in any season.

We are thrilled to welcome you April 14–19 at the Hyatt Regency Minneapolis and hope your time here is both productive and memorable. It would be our pleasure to host Central States again in the future.

Warm regards,

Melvin Tennant, CAE
President & CEO

LAND AND WATER ACKNOWLEDGMENT

We acknowledge and honor the Dakhóta Oyáte (Dakota People), who are the original stewards of the magnificent land and vibrant waterways of Minneapolis. The Dakota, as well as Ojibwe and other Indigenous people cared for the land, lakes and the Haha Wakpa (Mississippi River) for thousands of years before the arrival of Europeans.

Today, this place continues to hold significant spiritual and cultural importance for the strong, resilient and growing Indigenous community in Minneapolis and Minnesota.

We invite you to learn more about the Dakota, Ojibwe and other Indigenous people of this area, as well as the non-colonial history of Minneapolis and Minnesota. (Courtesy of Meet Minneapolis)

CSCA 2027 CALL FOR PAPERS AND PANELS

You are invited to submit competitive papers, panel discussions, and performance sessions for our 96th Annual Convention in Madison, WI. Members are encouraged to reflect on the theme of Navigate—Finding Inspiration in Uncharted Terrain. In our everyday lived experiences, we form deep and mutually meaningful relationships as well as face conflict, strain, and uncertainty in our personal and professional communities. Our desire for stability, certainty, and even predictability in our lives is made even more challenging in increasingly changing and complicated social worlds. The theme Navigate is an invitation to consider the possibilities in our everyday lives and to find opportunity, inspiration, and illumination as we navigate our collective futures.

Our lived experiences are complex, incomplete, partial, and are woven into ongoing realities. As we Navigate our experiences, we look for explanatory power and understanding through social, political, cultural, and community ongoings. To engage in the possibility of deeply understanding our journey, we must engage both the near and the far of lived realities. We ought to find inspiration in the uncharted terrain of past, present, and future human experiences.

Too frequently our understanding of human experience fails to Navigate the uncharted, complex, or unknown of lived experiences and often borders are installed to disallow all identities and voices from participation. To this end, I hope each of us may engage with the theme Navigate to foster spaces of deeper collaboration, reflection, and communication.

Faculty, students, independent scholars, K-12 educators, and community members are encouraged to submit and attend the convention. Institutional and community partnerships are particularly welcome. Submissions inclusive of all methodological perspectives in the communication discipline are expected and embraced.

Look for specific calls and submission information from each of the CSCA Interest Groups, Caucuses, and Sections.

Questions regarding the general call or the 2027 conference:

Contact Stevie Munz (Smunz@uvu.edu)

Deadline for Submissions: October 9, 2026, 11:59 pm CDT

Marquette University's Diederich College of Communication presents two distinctive graduate Master of Arts programs: one in Communication and the other in Corporate Communication. Both programs integrate theoretical concepts with practical applications.

Master of Arts in Communication offers competitive graduate assistantships that also cover tuition costs. Specializations include:

- Communication and Media Studies
- Digital Communication Strategies

Master of Arts in Corporate Communication offers courses in communication and business and may be completed 100% online or with a blend of in-person and online courses.

FACULTY LEARNING COMMUNITY

Brief Description of the FLC

The CSCA Faculty Learning Community (FLC) engages students/scholars of color in a year-long curriculum program to help enhance teaching and research in a specific area of scholarship. The FLC intends to help create a sense of community at CSCA for BIPOC scholars.

Submission Deadline: September 30, 2026

Look Out for the Call for Submissions in August on CSCA/NCA listservs!

Find out more at these CSCA 2026 FLC Events:

- 1505 Holding Space, Affirming Voice: Faculty Learning Community Research Presentations (Thursday 2:00-3:15 PM, Greenway J)
- 1606 Holding Space, Affirming Voice: Faculty Learning Community Teaching Presentations (Thursday 3:30-4:45 PM, Greenway J)

NEXT LEADERS NETWORK

Brief Description of the NLN

The Next Leaders Network's (NLN) goal is to build the future of the field and our organization by supporting up and coming scholars. NLN events provide an opportunity for members to learn about CSCA, interact with CSCA members, and help shape the future direction of the association. All members are strongly encouraged to attend, but especially early career scholars, students, and first-time CSCA attendees.

Join us for these CSCA 2026 NLN Events:

- 1502 Career Mentorship for Teaching, Promotion, and Job Application Materials (Thursday 2:00-3:15 PM, Mirage)
- 1710 Translating Research into Publications: Advice from Journal Editors on Article Publication (Thursday 5:00-6:15 PM, Mirage)
- 3503 CSCA Next Leaders Network Mentoring and Networking Reception (Saturday 2:00-3:15 PM, Mirage)

INCLUSIVITY SPEAKER SERIES KEYNOTE ADDRESS

Dr. Fernando Delgado

A Winding Road, A Worthy Journey

Friday, April 17, 2026, 6:00 to 6:45 PM
Hyatt Regency Minneapolis
Northstar Ballroom

This presentation reflects on three decades of Dr. Fernando Delgado's work within the field of communication and, more broadly, higher education institutions, to create ever more space for diverse voices and diverse bodies. The path toward diversity and inclusion is fraught with challenges and frustrations, but the goal remains as the field broadens its intellectual and cultural horizons. The lasting lessons include how to navigate institutional barriers and community obstacles established by those fearful of change and wary of losing institutional power and status. The response, therefore, must be concerted, and the march forward must always be intentional - even if incremental.

Since 2021, Dr. Delgado has served as the fourth president of Lehman College, an HSI located in Bronx, NY. After completing an undergraduate degree in political science at San José State University and two graduate degrees in communication studies at The University of Iowa, Dr. Delgado began his career at Arizona State University (ASU). His administrative career also began at ASU and has included deanships at Minnesota State University, Mankato and Hamline University and vice chancellorships for Academic Affairs at the University of Wisconsin - River Falls and the University of Minnesota Duluth.

Dr. Delgado's keynote address is sponsored by the Carolyn Calloway-Thomas Inclusivity Speaker Series Endowment Fund and CSCA's Ethnicity, Race, International, and Class Concerns Caucus.

Audio Podcasting in the Classroom and Beyond

Sponsor: Instructional Resources Interest Group

Chair: Breena Johanna Brockmann, Gustavus Adolphus College

Presenters:

Hagar Attia, Gustavus Adolphus College

Patricia Jeanne English-Schneider, Gustavus Adolphus College

Adrian E. Meza, The University of Texas at El Paso

Susan J. Stanfield, The University of Texas at El Paso

Phillip A. Voight, Gustavus Adolphus College

Isaac West, Vanderbilt University

This discussion panel explores how audio podcasts function as versatile teaching instruments—serving as assignment formats, assessment tools, and vehicles for content delivery. Panelists will share practical classroom applications, including student-created audio reflection journals and assignment examples, while demonstrating strategies for leveraging podcasts to strengthen engagement and deepen student learning.

Panel Topics:

- Designing instructor-created podcasts for effective content delivery
- Developing innovative student-generated podcast assignments
- Encouraging students to adopt podcasts as active study tools
- Applying podcasts in specialized contexts: conveying historical narratives, teaching investigative journalism principles through true-crime formats, and enhancing reflection and content integration in intercultural courses and study-abroad programs

Best in Translation: How Students Benefit from International Intercultural Sojourns

Sponsor: Intercultural Communication Interest Group

Chair: Rick Malleus, Seattle University

Presenters:

Alice Fanari, University of Oklahoma

Phil Chidester, Illinois State University

John R. Baldwin, Illinois State University

Kakali Bhattacharya Chakrabarti, Austin Peay State University

Ahmet Aksoy, Winona State University

Rick Malleus, Seattle University

The field of intercultural communication benefits when audiences within and outside the academy see value in students' international intercultural interactions. This panel interrogates translating the benefits of university student education abroad experiences for different audiences. From considering "controlled-culture shock" to forming deep friendships in Brazil, from examining complex intercultural identities to learning from language immersion, from partnering across campuses to learning from Zimbabwean vendors. Panelists highlight specific areas of learning, skill development and personal growth.

Negotiating Power, Gender, Media, and Voice in Postcolonial Bangladesh

Sponsor: Sexual Orientation and Gender Identity Caucus

Chair: Justin Rudnick, Minnesota State University, Mankato

Presenters:

Adeeb Kasem, Minnesota State University, Mankato

Md Ragib Rahman, Missouri State University

Sadia Ashrafi Thizbee, International Islamic University Malaysia

Janifar Kamal Nova, Southern Illinois University Carbondale

Tahura Tabassum Tari, Minnesota State University, Mankato

This panel examines how gendered voices in postcolonial Bangladesh navigate, resist, and reproduce power through everyday communication. While Bangladesh projects an image of female leadership, patriarchal and heteronormative discourses persist across political, religious, and media spheres. Drawing on feminist and intersectional communication theories (Allen, 2011; Bohrer, 2019; Pauly & Buzzanell, 2020), panelists analyze how control and resistance are played out in sermons, workplaces, television, and digital culture. Topics include religious moralization of women's roles, political promises of inclusion, labor and class-based inequities, and the erasure of queer identities in popular media. Together, these studies reveal how communicative spaces, both formal and mediated, shape who is heard, silenced, or erased. By centering Bangladeshi perspectives within global feminist and postcolonial frameworks, the panel expands discussions on gendered power, intersectionality, and voice in the Global South.

Regimes of AI: Critiquing Generative Artificial Intelligence

Sponsor: Communication & Technology Interest Group

Chair: Radhika Gajjala, Bowling Green State University

"Artificial Appropriation: Ownership and Co-optation of Marginalized Identities" Rianna Walcott, University of Maryland, College Park

"Navigating Virtual Infidelity: Narratives of AI Romantic Relationships on Reddit" Zehui Dai, Radford University

"Producing Selves Across Platforms" Kelsey Stanfield, Bowling Green State University; Saaka Falilatu, Bowling Green State University; Shahla Shahnaz Dyuti, Bowling Green State University; Allyson Ritchey, Bowling Green State University; Radhika Gajjala, Bowling Green State University

"The Gendered Regimes of AI" Kelsey Stanfield, Bowling Green State University; Shana MacDonald, University of Waterloo

Artificial Intelligence (AI) has crept into almost every facet of our day-to-day lives, and its advances have fostered numerous concerns. This panel seeks to elevate critiques that go beyond the oft-discussed concerns of AI, highlighting instead the complex, uneven hierarchies that implicitly, if not openly regiment, AI production, application, and use. Forefronting these overlooked perspectives, this panel centers critical discussions of how experience and identity are translated within and beyond generative outputs.

The Power of Bitching With Your Girlfriends

Sponsor: Women's Caucus

Chair: Amanda L. Brown, University of Wisconsin-Stout

Presenters:

MF Casper, Boise State University

Becky L. DeGreeff, University of Wisconsin-Stout

Heather Nesemeier, Minnesota State University Moorhead

Joy L. Daggs, Northwest Missouri State University

Amanda L. Brown, University of Wisconsin-Stout

This panel explores the power of sharing and commiserating with other women. While complaining can have negative results, venting has numerous benefits including reducing stress, empowerment (knowing that you're not alone in your experiences), solidarity/united front used to set boundaries, creating personal connections, etc. These bitch sessions often lead to brainstorming and problem solving, allowing both emotional release and intuitive response.

The Power of Protest Music, From Then to Now

Sponsor: Popular Culture Interest Group

Chair: Adam W. Tyma, University of Nebraska Omaha

"Learning from the Defeat of the Nazi Punks" Andrew Herrmann, Independent Scholar

"Which Flag To Embrace? The Intersection of Heritage-Based (aka "Trad") Music and Social Protest: Dropkick Murphys and Gogol Bordello" Adam W. Tyma, University of Nebraska Omaha

"I just started singing the news': Platform Politics and the Protest Music of Jesse Welles in Context" Megan M. Wood, Ohio Northern University

"See It. Say It. Censored': Kneecap, Punk Ethos, and the Politics of Protest" Austin Ulmer, University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee

From the time of Woodie Guthrie and Pete Seeger (and before) calling for Labor Rights to Bruce Springsteen barely cloaking his call for the Working Class in popular rock hooks to now with Dropkick Murphys and Gogol Bordello overtly calling against authoritarian rule and ethnic obliteration, protest music has been a centerpiece of cultural and countercultural moments in the US. In our current hyper-polarized political climate, protest music is finding new/renewed power and audiences. This panel works to understand how protest music (particularly within the Punk and Alternative spaces) works to translate ideological and political concepts into easily consumable and actionable songs and anthems.

Translating African American Music as Epistemology and Cultural Interlocutor

Sponsor: Rhetorical Theory and Criticism Interest Group

Chair: Dorthy Lee Pennington, University of Kansas

Presenters:

Saiemeh Wahidi, University of Kansas

Omolola Lasisi, University of Kansas

This panel discussion is a follow-up to a workshop presented at the 2025 CSCA Convention by Dorthy Pennington on the rhetorical dimensions of Black music, used interchangeably here with the term African American music. This panel discussion is also a carryover of a Spring 2025 graduate class in Black rhetoric at the University of Kansas, focusing on the theory and performance of Black music as rhetorical and ways of translating cultural and epistemological underpinnings that are informational and transformative in function. Contexts presented in this panel discussion and performance include the civil rights/protest genre, the religious/civil rights/eulogy genre, and the religious/Spiritual/folk song genre.

Sponsor: Media Studies Interest Group

Chair: Joe Watson, Baker University

Presenters:

Jennifer C. Dunn, Dominican University

Tasha R. Dunn, The University of Toledo

Sierra Kane, Roosevelt University

Jimmie Manning, University of Nevada, Reno

Dana Schowalter, Western Oregon University

This panel will examine problematic issues in ways the reality television genre translates profit and entertainment into harm of participants and audiences. These include how reality television frameworks influence participants' behaviors and mental health post-production; how "inappropriate" touching and relationships have been handled (or not handled) by production; how representations and online discussions of relationships are negotiated between participants, production, and audiences; and how contradictory portrayals of motherhood influence reality television participants and online engagements.

Translating Student Needs Into Pedagogy: Communication as a Bridge to Wellbeing and Lifelong Skills

Sponsor: Communication Education Interest Group

Chair: Megan Pope, San Jacinto College

Presenters:

Caroline Waldbuesser, University of Missouri

Kyle Vareberg, Northeastern State University

Evan Kirksey, University of Missouri

In the wake of political instability, global stressors, and rising student mental health concerns, communication instructors are uniquely positioned to translate student needs into responsive, supportive pedagogical strategies. This session explores how faculty can design inclusive assignments and classroom experiences that promote well-being and build transferable mental-health & wellness skills. Drawing from research linking communication to improved relationships and health outcomes, panelists will share practical tools for reimagining coursework. The session will actively engage the audience through reflective questions and discussion prompts, encouraging participants to share insights and collaboratively explore strategies for fostering compassionate, skill-building communication classrooms.

Sponsor: Short Courses

Presenters:

Madison A. Pollino, University of South Florida

Melissa McCormick, University of South Florida

Grounded in critical communication pedagogy, this short course will equip educators, mentors, and communication scholars with a culturally responsive framework for teaching public speaking skills to underserved middle school students whose first language is not English. Drawing from my ongoing community engagement initiative with a local mentorship program in Tampa, participants will explore how public speaking instruction can foster youth empowerment and translate knowledge and skillsets beyond a higher education context. By attending this short course, attendees will learn about practical tools and frameworks that can make public speaking accessible for other educational and/or community contexts.

"The Crisis of Sexual Deviancy: Counterpublics in Digital Gaming Spaces and the Structural Limitations of Community Moderation" Trent Luebbert, Columbia College

"The Olympic Golden Girls Fight Back: A Reclaiming of Agency and Identity in USA Women's Gymnastics" Lexi Traylor, Ball State University

Issues of physical health and bodily outcomes within contact sports is a well-developed area of research in which we understand health within competitive sports (Anderson & Kian, 2012; Sanderson et al., 2016). When it comes to mental health discourse within a sporting context, research has focused on athletes within contact sports publicly disclosing their mental health (Else et al., 2020) and operating within hegemonic masculinity scripts (Lavelle, 2021). However, within the competitive sporting context, how do ideas of healthy behavior, the "perfect athlete," and sexuality mess with the ways we understand health and gender within various competitive sporting modalities?

"Paradoxes of Hidden Disabilities in the Academy" Jimmie Manning, University of Nevada, Reno

In U.S. academia, disability often remains hidden or rendered invisible by institutional ableism, productivity mandates, and dominant narratives of meritocracy. While diversity discourses have gained visibility, disability—particularly when non-apparent or multiply marginalized—continues to be under-theorized, under-represented, and under-supported. This panel creates a space for critical engagement with visible and invisible disability in higher education, from multiple experiences and backgrounds. Panelists share personal experiences that illustrate the complexities of navigating academia with hidden and visible disabilities such as neurodivergence, blindness, autistic burnout, and ADHD. Together, the panelists interrogate how disability shapes affect and engagement; scholarly labor; pedagogical practice; institutional belonging; and intellectual identity.

Intersectionality and Health Communication: Transformation through Translational Teaching

Sponsor: Short Courses

Presenter:

Jenn Anderson, South Dakota State University

This short course will overview contemporary health communication theories and research that are based on nuanced approaches to intersectionality. Then, we will use those theoretical approaches as lenses through which to reflect on our teaching, with particular attention to the implications of our own intersectional positionalities and how they can enable and constrain opportunities for translational teaching. Finally, we will develop specific learning outcomes for teaching a deliberately intersectional health communication course that focuses on translating that complex approach into concrete terms and then developing students' skills for translating that learning into their professional lives-often within (allied) health fields.

Leading, Not Just Lasting, in Academic Middle Management

Sponsor: Short Courses

Presenter:

W. Benjamin Myers, The University of Toledo

This short course explores the paradox of department chair leadership: chairs are increasingly expected to deliver managerial results without the formal authority of traditional managers. They must navigate faculty expectations, institutional demands, and their own academic identities while advocating for their departments from a vulnerable and often ambiguous position-straddling the boundary between faculty and administration. This workshop, based on the book The New Department Chair: 100 Daily Reflections to Mindfully Design Your Term, explores the unique communication demands of academic middle-management. Participants will engage in interactive discussion and real-life case studies focused on the challenges of leading from the middle in higher education.

The CSCA Sexual Orientation and Gender Identity Caucus, Ethnicity, Race, International, and Class Concerns Caucus, and the Women's Caucus invite participants to a thought provoking discussion of Audre Lorde's Sister Outsider. Although Lorde's collection of essays and speeches was published more than 40 years ago, it foregrounds the continued need for solidarity and embracing social differences to achieve equity. This session will explore Lorde's classic text that focuses on amplifying marginalized voices in institutional systems of sexism, racism, homophobia, and classism. Attendees will engage with Lorde's arguments, reflect on their implications for communication studies, and consider how intersectionality continues to shape our scholarship, pedagogy, and activism. Join us for an astute conversation, even if you have not read the entire book!

The Politics of the Pitch: Nationalism, Race, and the Rhetoric of the 2026 FIFA World Cup

Presenters:

Anne Kerber, Minnesota State University, Mankato

Kevin Sauter, University of St. Thomas

Austin Ulmer, University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee

Adam W. Tyma, University of Nebraska Omaha

Emily Sauter, University of Nebraska Omaha

In June of 2018 the United States, along with Canada and Mexico, was chosen to co-host the 2026 FIFA World Cup. These games will feature 48 teams and will involve 104 matches across 16 host cities, eleven of which will be in the US, with the final match to be played in New York/New Jersey. In-person attendance for this event is expected to have 6.5 million fans across all the tournament matches, making it the largest World Cup in History. Yet in the United States anti-immigration rhetoric has reached a fevered pitch, and as of early October 2025, the Washington Post reported that U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE) has deported over 300,000 people. Additionally, Department of Homeland Security (DHS) officials claim that millions more have voluntarily departed the country. Though usually exempt from narratives of immigration, international athletes have already been denied visas to the United States, such as the Venezuelan Little League team, the Senegalese women's basketball team, and the Cuban women's volleyball team, raising concerns about future athlete's ability to participate in international sporting events hosted in the US. Likewise, the State Department has begun limiting visas to foreign travelers, particularly those from countries in Asia, Africa, and South America. In this discussion, panelists from across Universities will provide insight into the political, cultural, and rhetorical aspects of the lead up to the 2026 FIFA World Cup, utilizing their backgrounds in rhetorical criticism, critical cultural studies, media theory, and sports communication. This panel will interrogate intersecting themes of nationalism, race, gender, resistance, politics, and immigration, situating the 2026 World Cup within broader scholarly discussions on the sociocultural, political, and rhetorical implications of global mega-sporting events.

"'Til Death Do Us Part" - Performance Panel (Top Student Paper, Top Debut Paper)

Sponsor: Performance Studies and Autoethnography Interest Group

Author:

Sean Maulding, Southern Illinois University Carbondale

'Til Death Do us Part ('Til Death) is a sixty-minute solo performance of healing and humor about Phillip, a widower with a failing wedding business who is finally forced to confront his feelings about death after reluctantly accepting a job officiating a funeral. Although, there are no final resolutions for Phillip, we do see an hour of his reality as he struggles to separate crafting a eulogy for the deceased and having to face the passing of his wife whom he has never been able to mourn. Although, solo performers in performance studies have used their platform to explore issues of grief or trauma, deliberately modifying drama therapy for solo performers appears to be an understudied methodology in our discipline. 'Til Death Do Us Part was created through exploring that process of modification and adapting.

Haggard et al. (2011) describe mentoring as "a type of developmental relationship that shares some characteristics with other interpersonal relationships" and argue that core attributes of mentorship include reciprocity, developmental benefits, and regular or consistent interaction between the mentor and mentee over some period of time (p. 292). Mentoring as a practice has much variability, therefore it is important to understand it in its multiple forms. Thus, this discussion panel prompts further insight into how different professionals--whether educators, advisors, or industry workers within academia--define their roles as mentors and engage in mentorship practices.

Scholars in interpersonal and family communication often see their work intersect with areas like technology, health, organizational, or political communication-or across disciplinary boundaries entirely. Publishing such research brings both opportunities and challenges, as journals vary in theoretical, methodological, and disciplinary priorities. This panel explores strategies for positioning interdisciplinary research, translating arguments for diverse audiences, and navigating reviewer and editor expectations. Panelists will share experiences with publishing across areas--their successes, challenges, and lessons learned--and discuss broader implications for how cross-area scholarship shapes the framing, dissemination, and value of communication research within and beyond the discipline.

Research shows that organizational culture and leadership are shaped not only by local norms but also by intercultural differences amplified through digital platforms. As workplaces become increasingly global, leaders must navigate expectations about hierarchy, collaboration, and communication across diverse cultural settings. This panel will explore how intercultural communication research can be translated into organizational practice, offering strategies for digital leadership, boundary negotiation, and employee engagement in culturally diverse, technology-mediated workplaces (House et al., 2004; Szkudlarek et al., 2021).

Methods are at the core of research, translating questions into knowledge. Further, methods foster critical thinking, understanding data and research, and seeking answers. However, methods can also seem like a mysterious black box for students, where information goes in and is magically converted to results. Panelists will share practices that de-mystify methods and guide students' translation of data into meaning. Further, they will discuss how mentoring through methods transforms students' understanding of lived communication experiences.

The conference theme of "Translate" encourages reflection on the knowledge, skills, and support scholars need to successfully plan and carry out engaged scholarship. In addition to skills and resources needed to carry out this work, scholars need to consider career stage, goals, and expectations, along with institutional culture and support. Many campuses are encouraging community engagement and may include this as part of annual and career advancement yet may not have the infrastructure to support and evaluate this work. Panelists will address these issues from their experience in departmental, college, and campus leadership. Those considering or undertaking translational work and those who desire to better address roadblocks and positive actions are encouraged to attend and participate.

Increasingly, community colleges are adopting a compressed 8/7-week course model to increase completion. This shift, however, presents challenges for faculty who must condense a semester's worth of content without sacrificing academic rigor. While accelerated courses can boost completion rates for some, they can create an all-or-nothing scenario for others. Panelists will focus on presenting flipped strategies, streamlining assessments, and high-impact practices to maintain rigor, while garnering participation from the audience about their strategies, experiences, and challenges.

The average American finds political debates to be unpleasant, challenging, and anxiety-inducing experiences. Consequently, many tend to avoid debate entirely, or turn to social media to voice their grievances in an algorithm-controlled echo chamber. Thus, it should be no surprise that environment has given rise to influencers such as Charlie Kirk who prey on the political divide by rhetorically framing "debate" as "gotcha" moments. In fact, a report from the New York Times (Bensinger & Smart, 2025) details the rhetorical strategies utilized by Kirk, revealing how his debate strategy was "used to deliver a consistent hard-line message while orchestrating highly sharable moments" (para. 6). Following the death of Charlie Kirk, many fans and followers expressed their support of his "calm demeanor" and "willingness to engage" with a variety of issues. In essence, Kirk's legacy became synonymous with free speech while also silencing those who disagree with him politically. This raises questions about "acceptable" forms of public debate and the role of civility in political discourse. Therefore, this panel discussion seeks to engage with perception, practice, and pedagogy of argumentation and debate in a post "prove me wrong" era.

Presenters:

Jenny Turner, Minnesota State University, Mankato

Anne Kerber, Minnesota State University, Mankato

Tim McKenna-Buchanan, Manchester University

Stevie Munz, Utah Valley University

Adam W. Tyma, University of Nebraska Omaha

The increased usage of generative AI technologies and prevalence of (mis)information online have created an urgent need for integrating critical information literacy into basic communication courses. Panelists will draw from their classroom and professional experiences to consider how information literacy intersects with the communication discipline, how to effectively teach these skills in the basic course and help students apply them across contexts, and what opportunities and challenges arise when implementing information literacy in interdisciplinary collaborations.

Joel Iverson, University of Montana

Lynn Klundt, Northern State University

Although the often-cartoonish or bland portrayals of the American Midwest in popular culture have some roots in fact, the Midwest is an enormously diverse region. In the spirit of responsibly transmitting the true variety of the Midwest from an insider's perspective, this panel will feature five participants who will discuss their experiences relating Midwest culture to the world beyond its borders. The audience will also be invited to discuss fruitful paths toward responsible cultural transmission.

Although food is an integral aspect of culture and everyday life, intercultural communication scholars have not widely studied food and food cultures around us. In this panel, instead of food as a culture, we examine restaurants as a culture, cultural space, and cultural practices. Through personal narratives and autoethnographic accounts, each panelist discusses the role that food and restaurants play in their everyday lives. By doing so, they will examine restaurants as a cultural space to create communities, share memories, and also feel connected to home cultures.

Chair: Terri Fahnestock, Allen Community College

Presenters:

Chancee Craig, Johnson County Community College

Lindsey Welsch, Johnson County Community College

Traci Dillavou, Kansas City Kansas Community College

This panel examines how shifting degree requirements are transforming the communication classroom and how instructors can translate disciplinary knowledge into accessible, real-world skills. Historically, public speaking has dominated the general education communication requirement. Recent initiatives, however, have recognized interpersonal communication as an equivalent option by prompting a pedagogical shift from presentation-based instruction to the cultivation of soft skills such as empathy, reflection, conflict resolution, and relationship management. Panelists will explore strategies for "translating" communication theory into practice by designing assignments rooted in students' lived experiences, curriculum that engages both majors and non-majors, and teaching approaches that address evolving workforce and societal needs for relational competence. The session highlights practical, inclusive methods for making communication courses more relevant, impactful, and meaningful beyond the academy.

This panel examines how Indigenous communities in Bangladesh navigate systemic marginalization and assert agency through politics, media, leadership, language, and digital activism. From the legacies of colonial violence and Bengali ethno-nationalism to contemporary struggles for representation in film, cultural preservation, and online resistance, the panel translates indigenous communication as both a tool of oppression and a means of empowerment. Together, we foreground Indigenous voices and explore pathways toward justice, visibility, and decolonial futures.

Translating Artificial Intelligence Technologies to Media Studies in the Global South: Potentials, Transformation, and Destructions

Andrew Donkor, University of Maryland

In recent years, academic and policy conversations on artificial intelligence (AI) have expanded significantly, reflecting both the promise and the perils of this rapidly evolving technology. Dominant narratives, mostly within Western contexts, often frame AI as a dual force: on one hand, a driver of efficiency and innovation; on the other, a source of disruption through job displacement, social disengagement, academic dishonesty, and laziness among students and others. While these debates are central to understanding AI's technological and social transformation in the Global North, parallel conversations in Africa and other parts of the Global South remain largely marginalized or absent from mainstream scholarship and debate about AI and media studies. Thus, this panel brings together seasoned scholars, researchers, and teaching instructors based in U.S. institutions who draw on lived experiences and research in Africa and Asia to address significant questions about AI's potentials, transformations, and destructions, specifically to media studies in the Global South.

Teaching communication theory is often challenging for students, in part because they struggle to recognize practical application, and few resources help translate abstract theory into real-world practice. This panel explores how cross-theoretical case studies can generate deeper classroom engagement and help students connect theory to lived experience. Cross-theoretical case studies examine the same case through different theoretical lenses. Strategic Communication in the AI Era

Presenter:

Nagwan R. Zahry, University of Tennessee at Chattanooga

The short course aims to explore how communication faculty can bridge the gap between traditional communication expertise and emerging AI technologies. By using AI as a focal example, the discussion will highlight ways to thoughtfully integrate AI tools into communication courses. Key discussion questions include: What are the main learning goals this course should focus on? Which foundational communication theories or frameworks can support students in critically examining AI as a communicative agent or tool? What concepts are most useful in helping students analyze and question AI-generated content across journalism, PR, and social media platforms?

Translating Congressional Rhetoric

Sponsor: Political Communication Interest Group

Chair: Adam Gaffey, Winona State University

"Congressional Rhetoric and its Discontents: Lost in Translation?" Zornitsa Keremidchieva, University of Minnesota Twin Cities

"Reproductive Justice and the 2024 Senate Hearings on Abortion" Calvin Coker, University of Louisville

"Translating Knowledge Into Governance: The Radical Intentions and Failures of the 1946 Legislative Reorganization Act" Mark Schmutzler, University of Minnesota Twin Cities

"Translating the People's Pain into the Public's Pain: Senator Booker's Filibuster Against Tyranny For the 'Least of These'" Evan Layne Johnson, Florida SouthWestern State College

This panel considers how the evolving norms and conditions of congressional discourse translate into political change and what such developments can tell us about the current status and trajectory of US democracy. The panel offers both case studies of recent congressional debates on significant issues such as reproductive rights and social welfare protection, and theoretical perspectives on the historical development of congressional deliberation as a distinct form and context of political speech.

Translating Parenting: A Trifocal Look at How Primary Caregiver Communication Shapes Children's Mental Health

Sponsor: Interpersonal and Family Communication Interest Group

Chair: Wendy Adjei, University of Missouri

Presenters:

Esther Apreku, University of Missouri

Vera Bonku Turkson, Illinois State University

Lois Domena - Attafuah, North Dakota State University

This panel offers a trifocal translation of parenting through the lenses of Family Communication Patterns Theory (Koerner & Fitzpatrick, 2002), Family Systems Theory (Bowen, 1978), and Attachment Theory (Bowlby, 1969). Collectively, these frameworks illustrate how caregiver communication shapes children's emotional worlds and long-term mental health. We examine how everyday talk, tone, and disciplinary practices reflect deeper relational systems and attachment dynamics. We project parenting as a communicative process and show how family talk translates into children's emotional patterns, which aligns with the convention theme "Translate!" This offers fresh insights for scholars, educators, and practitioners committed to strengthening family well-being.

Shana Kopaczewski, Indiana State University

Leah Elina LeFebvre, University of Alabama

Amy May, University of Alaska Fairbanks

Erin Sahlstein Parcell, University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee

Michael Tollefson, University of Wisconsin-La Crosse

This panel will roast Dr. Mike Allen, humorously celebrating his career as a scholar and teacher. Colleagues, administrators, and former students will share affectionate and witty reflections on how he shaped their professional paths. In this lighthearted, celebrity-style roast, panelists will praise and playfully mock Dr. Allen before he responds in kind. The session will conclude with audience members sharing personal stories of Dr. Allen's influence on their academic and professional journeys.

"From First-Years to New Chairs: Using Communication Research and Practice to Lead and Mentor" Linda Dickmeyer, University of Wisconsin-La Crosse

"Putting the Translating in Learning: Teaching the Advanced Organizational Communication Course as an Applied Workplace Communication Skills Course" Scott A. Myers, West Virginia University

"The Communication Classroom Called Church" Roberta Davilla Robbins, United Methodist Church

"Translating Communication Knowledge into Community Change: A Communication Capstone Model" Donna R. Pawlowski, Bemidji State University

Over the past two decades, communication education researchers have focused their efforts on identifying the importance, significance, and relevance of communication research, and how this body of research underscores the importance of communication education (Morreale et al., 2023; Morreale & Pearson, 2008). The purpose of this panel is to explore how communication-based research-when integrated into teaching and service duties-can make a meaningful difference when extended across the breadth and depth of communication courses, training, or instruction. Embracing the theme of this year's convention, each panelist will offer insight into how they purposefully and uniquely translate communication research content into their teaching and service duties in order to make a communication difference in the lives of their students, their institutions, and the communities in which they live.

"Intergenerational Queer Love and Asian Feminism in Everything Everywhere All At Once (Top Paper)" Kim Hong Nguyen, University of Waterloo; Danielle M. Stern, Christopher Newport University

The papers presented in this session disrupt dominant narratives and investigate experiences of grief, gendered violence and harassment, and queer worldmaking through a variety of methods including focus groups, surveys, personal narrative, and autoethnography.

Emerging Tech Tools Showcase: STUDENT Teaching Smarter, Researching Faster

Sponsor: Communication & Technology Interest Group

Chair: Habeeb Abdulrauf, Western Michigan University

Presenters:

Shalewa Babatayo, University of Central Florida

Abdulmalik Adetola Adetola Lawal, University of Nevada, Reno

This session will demonstrate four AI-powered tools that we have found valuable for teaching, research, and experimental design. NotebookLM (<https://notebooklm.google>) enables instructors and students to upload syllabi or readings, generating summaries, study prompts, and comprehension questions. This tool has been a valuable resource in our classrooms, fostering inclusive learning and preparation time. Additionally, ResearchRabbit (<https://www.researchrabbit.ai>) is a platform that visualizes scholarly networks and helps trace citation patterns across fields. For experimental studies, Peerbots (<https://app.peerbots.org>) provides a simple way to run Wizard-of-Oz style simulations by creating conversational agents without coding. Finally, Elicit (<https://elicit.com>) offers an efficient way to support literature and systematic reviews by extracting evidence and study details from research articles. Each tool will be demonstrated live, and the discussion will center on how these resources can be adapted for communication scholarship.

Divine Narkotey Aboagye, Villanova University

Nick Stulga, Illinois State University

Lauren Bratslavsky, Illinois State University

Contemporary mediated technologies have afforded people access to resources that have shaped the peculiar ways in which information is disseminated across digital spaces for political and collective discourse. From mobilizing geopolitical TikTok memes among Bangladeshi citizens, to AI-generated posts for political campaigns during the 2024 election, to hashtags such as #UmbrellaMovement for connective action, social media platforms have given individual users and communities agency to collectively construct, negotiate, and make sense of global events. This panel aims to reinterrogate the current state, literature, and sociocultural implications of digital activism, politics, and democracy. Panelists will translate a wide range of research encompassing political campaigns, hashtag movements, and the music industry to demonstrate how mediated technologies are used to initiate political and collective engagement, while offering strategies for future scholarship and resources for online civic participation.

Translate our Voices: Journey of Errors in Transnational Scope

Sponsor: Ethnicity, Race, International, and Class Concerns Caucus

Chair: Sasha Allgayer, Southern Illinois University

Respondent: Ahmet Atay, The University of Alabama at Birmingham

Presenters:

Hsin-I Sydney Yueh, University of Missouri

Diana Trebing, Saginaw Valley State University

Eddah Mutua, St. Cloud State University

Anjana Mudambi, University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee

Emi Kanemoto, Bryant University

Radhika Gajjala, Bowling Green State University

Amy Aldridge, Middle Tennessee State University

This panel continues a multi-year collaboration among transnational scholars and their IDEA partners at CSCA. In line with this year's theme, "Translate," it invites both transnational and non-transnational scholars into a shared space to explore the question: "How do we translate our thoughts and academic knowledge into action to challenge hegemonic norms and U.S.-centric academic spaces?" Panelists will read Journey of Errors: Finding Home in Academia by Ahmet Atay (2018) and reflect on their own experiences. This shared text anchors a conversation about the emotional, intellectual, and institutional challenges of transnational scholarship, highlighting both barriers to and strategies for inclusion and connections. Dr. Ahmet Atay will serve as the respondent for this session.

A Winding Road, A Worthy Journey (Carolyn Calloway-Thomas Inclusivity Speaker Series Keynote: Dr. Fernando Delgado)

Sponsors: CSCA First Vice President; Ethnicity, Race, International, and Class Concerns Caucus

Chair: Jennifer Willis-Rivera, University of Wisconsin-River Falls

Presenter:

Fernando Delgado, Lehman College

This presentation reflects on three decades of Dr. Fernando Delgado's work within the field of communication and, more broadly, higher education institutions, to create ever more space for diverse voices and diverse bodies. The path toward diversity and inclusion is fraught with challenges and frustrations, but the goal remains as the field broadens its intellectual and cultural horizons. The lasting lessons include how to navigate institutional barriers and community obstacles established by those fearful of change and wary of losing institutional power and status. The response, therefore, must be concerted, and the march forward must always be intentional - even if incremental.

Dr. Delgado's keynote address is sponsored by the Carolyn Calloway-Thomas Inclusivity Speaker Series Endowment Fund and CSCA's Ethnicity, Race, International, and Class Concerns Caucus.

This is a discussion and an interactive panel. We will start the discussion of learning goals; what needs to be taught? We are probably already utilizing new technologies or observing new norms in action, but what guidance does a student need to become a competent and/or strategic communicator? 1) Social relationships that define ethos are more inclusive and diverse. 2) Epistemological norms that define logos have shifted from literate Western Analytics toward feminine, cross-cultural, and post-literate "electracy." 3) Performative norms that define decorum in the public sphere now address technological competence, electronic mediation, and digital dissemination.

This paper panel narrates the experiences of first-generation faculty (FGF)-former first-generation college students who have gone on to become faculty members. While much research has interrogated first-generation student experiences, we employ autoethnography to provide first-person, reflexive accounts of FGF navigating the academy, including the affective and embodied tensions that comprise this precarious position. By exposing the implications of being lost in translation, this panel deconstructs success in academia and forges an equitable path forward.

"Religious and Social Taboos Around Menstruation in Bangladeshi Film and Advertising" Md Ragib Rahman, Missouri State University

"Superstitions, Traditional Beliefs, and Their Impact on Public Health in Bangladesh" Sadia Ashrafi Thizbee, International Islamic University Malaysia

This panel examines how superstitions, taboos, and digital risk shape women's health in Bangladesh. We will analyze how folk healing and postpartum rules shape care seeking; how menstrual knowledge moves across Indigenous traditions, classrooms, and clinics; how films and commercials frame menstruation; and how digital platforms amplify harassment, pseudoscientific cures, and reputational harm for women entrepreneurs. We ground these insights in health communication to advance equity, access, trust, and safer care.

Higher Education in Transition: Implications for the Undergraduate Institutions

Sponsor: Undergraduate Education and Administration Section

Chair: Kelsey Menge, Bismarck State College

Presenters:

Shannon C. VanHorn, Valley City State University

Kimberly M. Weismann, Bismarck State College

Beth Ribarsky, University of Illinois Springfield

Educational structures are rapidly changing as perception of the value of a post-secondary education is questioned. Undergraduate institutions are exploring alternative pathways for potential students as a way to increase enrollment and the viability of their departments. This panel explores some of these pathways taken to reach both the needs of the students and the needs of the institutions. The participants hope to engage the audience in discussing these transitions. On September 3, 2024, the Higher Learning Commission provided guidelines and an application process for reduced credit bachelor's degrees. Guidelines and an application process are meant to pave the way for colleges and universities accredited by HLC to offer reduced credit bachelor's degree programs. Institutions can offer these degrees with as low as 90 credits. One panelist will discuss the guidelines and explore the possibilities and implications of reduced-credit degrees in our discipline. Another panelist will discuss how her institute is implementing stackable certificates and credentialing. This use of micro-credentials offers especially the non-traditional student both initial training for the workforce, but also a pathway to earn degrees. A third panelist will discuss a new model of a degree plan in her program. This model provides opportunities for both the traditional and non-traditional student as they navigate the ever-changing needs in the workforce and in higher education.

Sponsor: Basic Course Interest Group

Chair: Madison A. Pollino, University of South Florida

Presenters:

Mac Williams, University of Mississippi

Christopher (Kit) Medjesky, University of Findlay

Madison A. Pollino, University of South Florida

This panel explores the complexities and challenges of teaching public speaking in 2025. Educational spaces may be situated in politically polarized regions and/or communities as well as in online spaces prone to misinformation. The panel also considers issues of institutional support and policy changes that affect the basic course and how departments can support both faculty and students. Finally, we will offer best practices for how instructors can prepare students to not only speak effectively but also navigate environments where their voices may be unwelcome, opposed, or actively silenced.

Translating Crisis as Mediated Events: Toward Theory and Practice

Sponsor: Strategic and Applied Communication Interest Group

Chair: Matthew W. Seeger, Wayne State University

Presenters:

Khairul Islam, Florida Atlantic University

Deborah Sellnow-Richmond, Southern Illinois University Edwardsville

Xianlin Jin, The University of Toledo

Najma Akhther, Nazareth University

Rodrigo Soares, University of Vermont

Mohammad Ali, University of North Dakota

This panel brings together experts who will share research insights and experiences that examine crises as mediated events and their implications for crisis communication theory and practice. More specifically, Dr. Xianlin Jin will present research comparing media framing of the 2023 Hawaii and 2022 Chongqing mountain fires, exploring how coverage shaped public responses, influenced perceptions of crisis management, and informed policymaking. Dr. Khairul Islam will discuss the 3M PFAS crisis, highlighting how prolonged neglect of risk evolved into a full-scale corporate crisis. Adding a broader lens, Dr. Deborah D. Sellnow-Richmond will examine media's role in perpetuating, exacerbating, and even creating mega-crises, with special attention to peace journalism and radical media ethics. Perspectives from the Global South will also be featured. Dr. Mohammad Ali will share insights from a project that analyzes the 2016 Bangladesh Bank cyber heist, one of the world's largest financial scams, as a mediated event, focusing on how news coverage framed the crisis and shaped public perceptions. Dr. Najma Akhther will discuss media's role in government crisis communication, further emphasizing the global scope of crisis mediation. Together, these projects illustrate how crises become mediated events and deepen our understanding of their influence on public discourse, crisis management, and organizational responses.

Translating Health as Liberation: Healthy Citizens and State Power (Top Panel)

Sponsor: Health Communication Interest Group

Chair: Nolan Bowers, Ohio University

Presenters:

Jonathan Baker, Ohio University

Cimmiaron Alvarez, Kean University

Nolan Bowers, Ohio University

Josephine K. Boumis, Texas Christian University

R. Amanda Cooper, University of Connecticut

David Dooling, The University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill

Amid broader crackdowns on marginalized communities, this panel examines how the state struggles to meet their health needs. We center translation as a communicative process across legal, interpersonal, cultural, and organizational contexts, foregrounding how meaning travels across settings. In doing so, we trace how rights to health and wellbeing are constituted and materialized through everyday communicative practices. Our perspectives illuminate the intersections and processes through which discourses about rights to health and wellbeing are actualized and made materially consequential.

"Translating AI Innovation from Newsrooms to Classrooms: U.S. Journalism Faculty Perspectives on Preparing Future Reporters for GenAI Integration." Richard Mensah Adonu, University of Tennessee, Knoxville

This panel brings together four studies that examine how artificial intelligence is reshaping contemporary news production, newsroom decision-making, and representational patterns across both local and global contexts. Collectively, these papers investigate how journalists adopt AI writing tools, how generative models shape news framing and issue salience, and how algorithmically produced content introduces new forms of bias, particularly in relation to political, cultural, and regional representation. Drawing from surveys, content analyses, and industry-facing perspectives, the panel highlights the growing interdependence between journalistic practice and AI-driven systems, emphasizing both opportunities for efficiency and emerging threats to editorial autonomy, accuracy, and accountability. A Global South case study further demonstrates how algorithmic inequality manifests in data-poor environments, revealing the uneven consequences of AI technology across sociopolitical contexts. Together, these papers offer timely insight into the challenges and possibilities of integrating AI into news work, raising broader questions about transparency, fairness, and public trust in an era of computationally mediated journalism.

Discussing discrimination and politics in educational contexts is increasingly difficult and the potential for pushback is high. Due to the charged nature of these topics, students are reluctant to engage in discussions. Outside the classroom, higher education institutions are struggling to communicate the value of the degree and increasingly must deal with accusations of "indoctrination." Humanities and Social Science courses are struggling to convey their value to internal and external stakeholders.

Respecting Voices and Nurturing Self: Pursuing Balance While Teaching in Challenging Times

Sponsor: States Advisory Council

Chair: Gina Jensen, Webster University

Presenter:

Scott Jensen, Webster University

Society is plagued with unprecedented divisiveness that is carried by students and teachers into teaching and learning spaces. Increasingly, perspectives are polarized and differences are perceived as threatening. This program highlights the imperatives of honoring voice, remaining objective in the face of critical discussion and debate, and discouraging inappropriate and irrelevant social commentary. It suggests strategies for incorporating debate and disagreement in respectful and pedagogically sound ways. Equally important is the need for teachers to be deliberate in their own self-awareness and strategies for coexisting as teachers and engaged citizens. All of this comes together as a call for educators to nurture self-care and life balance within the challenges of teaching in our challenging times. The program includes case studies and suggestions for course management and self-care.

"'Stupid Clanker': Robot Slurs and the Repository of Otherness" Nathan Rothenbaum, Missouri State University; Kexi Chen, Missouri State University; Rawan Hesham Hamouda Hegazy, Missouri State University; Inna Van Emburg, Missouri State University

The scholarship presented here addresses alluring rhetorical trends on internet platforms. The authors discuss how social media discourse, as well as native advertising on the same platforms, generates honest, and sometimes strangely problematic, commentary on shifting tides in technology and culture.

Translating Reflexive Methodologies for Applied Interpersonal Inquiry

Sponsor: Interpersonal and Family Communication Interest Group

Chair: Josephine K. Boumis, Texas Christian University

Presenters:

Tony Adams, Bradley University

Jonathan Baker, Ohio University

Josephine K. Boumis, Texas Christian University

David Dooling, The University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill

Tasha R. Dunn, The University of Toledo

This panel brings together scholars who have authored and published reflexive interpersonal research (e.g., autoethnography, auto-theory, reflexive thematic analysis, critical ethnography). We foreground reflexivity's central premise that researcher position shapes interpretation and presentation of findings. Panelists will offer meta-commentaries on earlier publications from different career stages and time spans from publication, tracing how their stances, contexts, and communities reframe claims over time. We translate those lessons into concrete, applied practices for interpersonal research design, analysis, ethics, and writing.

Translating Vulnerability: Communicating Masculinity, Sexual Health, and Mental Well-Being

"Men's Body Image Narratives in Emerging Adulthood" Ellen Jordan, University of Minnesota Twin Cities

"Safe Sex Practices and Social Support Typologies in Digital Spaces: Assessing Nigerian Gay Men's Sexual Health Information Exchange on Social Media" Dennis Ekwemnachukwu Okeke, University of Colorado Boulder; Mike Allen, University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee; Christiana Oluwakemi Ibiwoye, University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee; Ousman Mbaye, University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee; Anthony Okeke, Nnamdi Azikiwe University

"Translating Distress into Dialogue: Predicting Mental Health Help-Seeking Through the Theory of Planned Behavior" Shatakshi Semwal, Ohio University; Athar Memom, Ohio University

"What is Good, Better, or Best? A Literature Review to Assess Outcomes, Challenges, Success, and Way Forward of Sexual Health Campaigns in the Muslim World" Roshni Ashiq, Ohio University

Health communication often requires translating vulnerability into connection. This panel explores how men and communities navigate stigma, identity, and support through communication. Topics include Nigerian gay men's online sexual health exchanges, men's body image narratives, mental health help-seeking behaviors, and cultural messaging in Muslim sexual health campaigns. Collectively, these studies reveal how communication enables translation between silence and expression, stigma and support, across gendered and cultural contexts.

Transnational Perspectives on Online Gendered Online Queer Spaces

Sponsor: Sexual Orientation and Gender Identity Caucus

Chair: Radhika Gajjala, Bowling Green State University

Respondent: Stephanie Young, University of Southern Indiana

"Digital Empowerment as a Neo-Colonial Practice: How Development Discourses Shape Marginalized Gender Communities' Online Presence and Lived Realities" Srishty Thakur, Bowling Green State University; Radhika Gajjala, Bowling Green State University

"Queer Activism and Everyday Digital Practices" Ahmet Atay, The University of Alabama at Birmingham

"Queerly Undercommons in/of Nigerian Digital Resistance" Ololade Faniyi, Emory University

"Traditional Love..Not Enough: Repackaged Karwachauth and Hitting the Boundaries of Queer Love" Tarishi Verma, Albertus Magnus College

The papers in this panel examine queer and feminist digital activism and advocacy across diverse contexts, revealing tensions between empowerment and structural constraints. They offer critical counterpoints to the celebratory narrative of online gendered and of online queer spaces in order to foreground contradictions of how the seemingly queer digital visibility on the one hand cis women's visibility on the other negotiates contradictions of various spatio-temporal as well as of multiply mediated and placed contexts of queer (un)liveability.

Creativity and Curriculum: Collaborative Multimedia Production for Engaged Learning

Sponsor: Instructional Resources Interest Group

Chair: Luis Arias, The University of Texas at El Paso

Presenters:

Adrian E. Meza, The University of Texas at El Paso

Janet Hill, The University of Texas at El Paso

Luis Arias, The University of Texas at El Paso

How can educators make academic content more tangible for students? Our session presents a proven solution from The University of Texas at El Paso (UTEP): a long-running collaboration between criminal justice faculty and a campus creative team. We demonstrate how story-driven multimedia, like crime scene reconstructions and audio narratives, bridge the gap between theory and practice and measurably boost student engagement. Attendees gain a framework for turning complex subjects into memorable and effective learning experiences.

Queermunity Field Trip

Sponsor: Sexual Orientation and Gender Identity Caucus

Chair: Danielle M. Stern, Christopher Newport University

Join the SOGI Caucus for a field trip social to Queermunity, a vibrant event venue, gathering space, and café in Minneapolis, dedicated to offering high-quality experiences for LGBTQ+ and BIPOC communities and their allies. Queermunity is located at 3036 Hennepin Avenue, less than a 10-minute Metro ride on the E Line (plus a collective 12-minute walk to/from the stations). If you prefer to rideshare, meet in the lobby of the conference hotel at 4:45 pm to coordinate that process. Queermunity is open to the public daily from 8 am to 8 pm, with free general entry. Their space thrives thanks to café patronage, so let's buy some snacks and beverages as we chat about SOGI community and queer futures! A portion of these sales is reinvested into queer-affirming resources and free community offerings.

Our classrooms are becoming a mix of traditional-aged and adult learners. We also have more online courses and have been asked to teach courses with higher course caps. Additionally, we are working in the realm of AI and its implications for how we teach. With these new horizons, it is important to create strategies for student engagement that are as inclusive as possible for all types of student learners and classroom modalities. This panel of instructors will discuss how they keep the passion and create engagement with their students in online and in-person classes. Some strategies include culturally responsive pedagogy, instructor immediacy, using AI, inclusive classroom activities, student self-designed assignments, distributed learning, use of board games, and more. Come and join us for an engaged discussion!

Teaching Empathy Isn't Woke

Sponsor: Communication Education Interest Group

Chair: Becky Roberts, Jackson College

Presenters:

Tracie Devault, Missouri University of Science & Technology

Lisa Marie Pavia-Higel, Missouri University of Science & Technology

Kendrea James, Northwest Arkansas Community College

Melinda Bellatti, Tulsa Community College

This panel explores strategies for teaching other-based communication skills, such as empathy, perspective-taking, and recognizing biased language, in politically hostile climates where such content is often dismissed as "woke." Panelists teaching in conservative regions will share approaches for reframing these skills as professional competencies rather than political stances, designing activities that reduce defensiveness, and fostering respectful dialogue across ideological divides. Discussion will also address managing institutional scrutiny, protecting academic freedom, and sustaining instructor well-being. Attendees will gain adaptable classroom practices and language-framing strategies for cultivating ethical communication competencies in environments resistant to empathy-focused instruction.

This panel examines how gender-inclusive teaching methods are applied throughout communication courses to create more equitable and socially aware learning environments. Using insights from feminist media theory, intersectional pedagogy, and critical communication, we explore practical ways educators can bring gender conscious perspectives into various activities. We consider how these approaches can shape learning outcomes by pushing back against dominant narratives, elevating underrepresented voices, and helping students navigate real-world communication with a more ethical and inclusive mindset.

The rise of mobile technologies and participatory media practices has altered journalism and public life. Everyday encounters such as walking down a street, sitting in a café, or waiting at a crosswalk can now be instantly turned into content, livestreamed, or circulated virally without the subject's awareness or permission. From prank videos designed to shock or entertain, to so-called "street interviews" with passersby, to citizen journalists documenting social events, the boundaries of public versus private expression are increasingly unsettled. New media encourages translation of ordinary life into digital spectacle, raising urgent questions for journalism and communication educators: How do we translate long-held norms of privacy and consent into a world where public visibility is increasingly coerced?
